Advanced ZAPOTEC civilization of Mexico had been working on calendrical problems during the early 1st millennium BC.

At city of Monte Alban in Highland Mexico, the ZAPOTEC Calendar is described in great detail in a series of inscriptions running across the walls around the chief

Ceremonial courtyard

They adopted for their religious festivals a second calendar of 260 days. Later the Maya and Aztecs developed the calendar into a numerological game of ever-increasing complexity. After 52 repeats of the normal 365-day year, 73 of the 260 day year would have elapsed, at which point the two cal's would start again on the same day. This Calendar Round of 52 yrs (18,980 days) became an integral
